DESIGN MEETS CONVERSATION AGAIN

Native Union is a design-driven technology accessories company founded in Hong Kong by John Brunner and Igor Duc. The brand was created around the idea that tech accessories should combine functionality with elevated design, blending modern technology with thoughtful materials and everyday usability. Today, Native Union is known for premium charging accessories, cases, desktop products, and lifestyle tech essentials with a contemporary, fashion-forward aesthetic.

The company's first and most iconic product was the POP Phone series — a retro-inspired handset created shortly after the launch of the original iPhone. Designed to reconnect people with the tactile experience of talking on the phone, the POP Phone combined the nostalgic silhouette of a classic telephone receiver with modern smartphone connectivity. The product quickly became a design phenomenon, appearing in museums, fashion boutiques, concept stores, and media outlets worldwide.

Originally launched as a wired handset for mobile phones, the POP Phone later evolved into Bluetooth and USB-C compatible versions designed for smartphones, tablets, laptops, and video conferencing. Native Union positioned the product not only as a playful design object, but also as a more comfortable and ergonomic way to take long calls. Recent versions also emphasize sustainability through recycled materials and durable construction.

Today, the POP Phone remains one of Native Union's most recognizable products — celebrated for its blend of nostalgia, humor, design culture, and modern functionality — while the brand continues expanding into premium tech accessories for contemporary living.

POP PHONE

The POP Phone became especially popular among creatives, travelers, and fashion-conscious consumers who appreciated its blend of functionality and expressive design. Available in a wide range of colors and finishes over the years, the series helped transform everyday tech accessories into personal style statements.
