Tobisho is a Japanese manufacturer based in Yamagata Prefecture specializing in professional horticultural shears. Founded in 1930, the company continues a regional tradition of blade-making that dates back to samurai sword production in the 1300s. Their shears feature hand-brazed blades crafted from Yasuki Aogami Hagane steel, prized for exceptional sharpness and durability. Each pair is produced through more than 200 meticulous steps, many performed by hand by skilled craftsmen. The result is a line of precision pruning tools trusted by professional gardeners for their strength, smooth cutting, and lasting performance.

Terazaki Hamono Tsume Scissors

Terasaki Blade produces Kenshi Nigiri scissors, traditional Japanese grip scissors crafted using the rare "Total Fire Construction" (Sohizukuri) method. This technique forges heated iron and steel together by hand at temperatures around 1,000°C without using molds. Unlike most modern scissors made from machine-processed composite steel, each pair is individually hammered and shaped by a craftsman. This demanding process allows precise control of spring strength, grip comfort, and blade shape. The Kenshi series includes three blade styles: Claw, Long Blade, and Tapered. The versatile tapered style is widely used for sewing, crafts, and traditional confectionery work. With careful use, these handcrafted scissors are durable tools designed to last a lifetime.
